

Roger Hodgson gave everything

Aug. 6th 2006, 22:37

When we at last were able to get Roger Hodgson to the Faroes, after 36 hours in the air, he gave the crowd at the Summer Festival everything, that they could expect, with among others the song Give a Little Bit.

Together with all the other hits from the Supertramp period the performance at the Summer Festival became unforgettable. Despite the big excitement because of the uncertainty throughout Saturday if planes could land at the airport, Roger Hodgson were able to fulfill his role as the biggest name at the festival.

He sang "take a jumbo cross the water" and we can just conclude, that it doesn't hamper Hodgson to fly, because after being 36 hours on a plane on his way to the Faroes, the man stood there on stage in good mood and fit, even if it now was night or close to morning.

Breakfast in America. Yes, Hodgson nearly sang together with people's breakfast in Klaksvik. But all these hits just went home and the crowd got them all in a row: Give a Little Bit, Breakfast in America, The logical song and It's raining again. The last mentioned was appropriate for the weather, but when he sang It's raining again, not a single drop came from the skies.

Roger Hodgson and his sax player were able to fill the air and the festival. The voice is the same characteristic voice, which keeps the songs up and makes them special.
